The Canadian Association of Allied Health Programs (CAAHP), Canadian Medical Association (CMA) and the Association of Canadian Community Colleges (ACCC) are continuing their collaboration and jointly hosting an important day on: Clinical Education - Challenges and Strategies.

We know from the feedback at our April 2003 Forum as well as our Invitational Seminar in October 2003 on entry-to-practice credentials (see www.accc.ca/english/events/reports.cfm) that this is a topic of great interest to everyone both in the educational as well as the clinical milieu.

The purpose of this conference is to provide a forum for health professionals, educators, employers, governments and others to share information regarding the key challenges in providing clinical education; and to explore innovative strategies for providing and evaluating clinical education in allied health professional programs.

The Conference will open with a keynote address by Dr. Paul Gamble. Dr. Gamble is the current President and CEO of the Michener Institute for Applied Health Sciences, and is the former Director of the Health Administration Degree program at Ryerson University. Dr. Gamble has an extensive background in health administration, health policy as well as education.

Panel presentations will highlight innovative projects and clinical education strategies such as simulation and electronic evaluation tools.
